Commercial Cleaning Client Acquisition OS

You bought a system for finding commercial cleaning contracts. Here is what's in it and what to do first.

Read this page. It takes four minutes. Then open the tracker.

What this is

A method for finding commercial accounts worth pursuing, identifying the person who signs, spotting a real reason to contact them now, and running that contact through to a walkthrough.

It is not a list of leads. There are no contacts in this package. You build your own list, for your own city, using sources that are public and free.

That is deliberate. A list goes stale in ninety days and only works once. A method works every quarter, in every city you expand into.

The order everything runs in

ACCOUNT → PERSON → TRIGGER → OUTREACH → CONVERSATION → WALKTHROUGH → PROPOSAL → WIN or LOSS → LEARN

Most people run this backwards. They start with a message, then look for someone to send it to.

Start with the account — which buildings you can actually service, at a size worth your time. Then the person, because in a dental office the practice manager signs and the dentist doesn't. Then the trigger — the dated, public reason this account is worth contacting this quarter.

Only then write anything.

What's in the package

File	What it's for
00 Start Here	This page
01 Client Acquisition OS	The whole method in one document. Read second.
02 Account & Trigger Tracker (Excel)	The working file. You'll live in this.
03 Trigger Library	Sixteen signals in four tiers, where to find each, and what you may say
04 ICP & Targeting	Which buildings to go after, and which to skip

File	What it's for
05 Decision-Maker Guide	Who signs at each building type, and how to find their name
06 Prospecting Workflow	Building and qualifying an account list from scratch
07 Outreach Sequences	Six sequences by segment and trigger, ready to adapt
08 Reply Handling	Ten kinds of reply and what to do with each
09 Walkthrough System	What to measure, what destroys margin, how to price
10 Proposal System	The seven-section structure and the three-tier table
11 30-Day Implementation	Day by day, if you want a schedule
12 Metrics & Scoreboard (Excel)	Ten minutes every Friday
13 Automation Blueprint	Only when the manual version works

Do this first

Today, about an hour:

1. Open 02 Account & Trigger Tracker. Look at the Quick Start tab.
2. Read 03 Trigger Library once. Sixteen signals in four tiers. You'll come back to it.
3. Add ten accounts from your own city to the Account Tracker. Ten, not a hundred.
4. Score them. The dropdowns do the arithmetic.

This week:

5. For the accounts scoring 16 or above, find the person who signs. 05 tells you which role.
6. Find the trigger. Log it with a date and where you found it.
7. Pick the matching sequence from 07. Send it.
8. Log the send in the Follow-up Tracker.

That's the loop. Everything else in the package makes that loop better.

If you only remember three things

A list is not a pipeline. Names are free. What's scarce is a good reason to call someone this week.

A trigger is an event, not a conclusion. You saw a permit filed. You did not see their cleaning contract. Say what you observed. Never say what you think it means — that they have no cleaner, that they're unhappy, that they're shopping. You can't know it, and buyers can tell when you're guessing.

Every account you're working needs a next action and a date. No next action means it isn't in your pipeline. It's a name on a list.

What this will not do

It won't get you contracts without calls and walkthroughs. It removes the guesswork about who to contact and when — not the work.

It won't tell you a prospect is unhappy with their cleaner. Nothing can, from the outside.

It won't work if you send four hundred emails in week one. Start with ten accounts you'd be glad to win.

A note on sending email

Everything here assumes US commercial email. Three things are not optional: your real business name and a real postal address in every message, a working way for someone to opt out, and honouring that opt-out immediately and permanently.

This is guidance from one operator to another, not legal advice. If you're unsure, ask someone qualified — particularly before you start making cold calls, which is a different area of law with its own rules.
